Legal issues on telehealth

Abstract(영문):

As telehealth expands rapidly, various legal issues are arising, including health information, the scope of telehealth allowed under the current laws, medical personnel's responsibility in the event of a medical accident. To solve this problem, it is necessary to introduce a dynamic consent system, a broad consent for the secondary use of medical data, and the right to transmit health information in order to increase the utilization of health information while protecting individuals' privacy rights to self-determination. In addition, it is necessary to reorganize the Personal Information Act and the Bioethics Act to address concerns over violations of the Personal Information Act, clarify legitimate use of health information, violations and sanctions, and strengthen personal information education.

It is necessary to revise the Medical Law to expand the number of patients and medical institutions subject to telehealth treatment, create a system for telemedicine, and create a rapid approval system for digital treatments.
